

NO! THIRD AVENUE WON'T STAND FOR WOMEN SMOKERS

Clarence Monahan Had to Speak Quite Rudely to Widow Who Tried Innovation.

It was a light breakfast that young Mrs. Marion Arlington, who says she is a widow, ordered today in the restaurant at No. 728 Third avenue. She called for strawberries and cigarettes. After eating the strawberries she lit a cigarette. So Clarence Monahan, who is a waiter, observed the Clarence part—approached her and said in his best Clarence voice:

"Lady, you must think you're at the Ritz-Carlton. Kindly cut out the cigarette."

Well, they had words. And then Monahan triumphed over Clarence and a stern demand was made upon the patron for the amount of her check—forty cents.

"And then this dame"—it is Monahan speaking now—"digs down into her bosom and hands me one of them $10 stage money bills with green on the front of it and an advertisement on the back. So I tell her to try again and then she gets sore and says it's not money. So I grab her silk cloak for security and she beats it outside after calling me some of the roughest names I ever heard—and I've been on Third avenue a good while—and comes back with a cop. I tell the cop just how it is, and instead of pinching me, he pinches her."

Hearing this, Magistrate Kernohan, sitting in Yorkville Court, calls upon Mrs. Arlington for explanations. She explains that she comes originally from Albany but is stopping temporarily at No. 110 East Twenty-ninth street. She is out of funds for the moment but is perfectly willing to leave any part of her costume with his Honor as collateral for the restaurant bill. With a blush Magistrate Kernohan declines and says the fine will be $2 for disorderly conduct. Not having the money the widow goes down stairs the hard look she gave that waiter. Monahan stood firm all right, but Clarence fairly quailed before those baleful eyes.

WALL STREET.

Heavy unloading of American Tobacco bonds, combined with tremendous selling of Steel common, was the way Wall street received the Supreme Court's decision in the American Tobacco case this morning.

Initial sales were mostly higher. Union Pacific, St. Paul and a few other issues rose about 1 point, reflecting other conditions that prevailed in the London Exchange early today. Higher ranges were only temporary, however, for a wave of selling orders began to pour into the market. In a reaction that lasted throughout the first hour, Steel tumbled 2 points and other leaders scored losses of from 1 to 2 points.

Support was offered at lower levels, and prices commenced to rally slowly from the bottom.

Early in the afternoon, after the list had been lowered from 1 to 3 points, prices began to display a firmer tone. In the final hour a spirited recovery led by Union Pacific, Chesapeake and Ohio and the Hill shares carried the market to within 1 and 2 points of the highest of the day. While losses predominated at the close there were enough advances to give the list an irregular appearance.

The Closing Prices.
